

Sonny Tanabe's Spearfishing on the Island of Hawaii is a pictorial history of diving off Hawaii Island, beginning with the Hawaiians who dove without fins or goggles and relied on muscle power to thrust their wooden spears. Today, spearfishermen are freediving down to 80-100 feet in the search for large pelagic predators such as marlin, ulua and ono. Bluewater freedivers are now hunting off of fish aggregation bouys anchored in waters that are often deeper than a mile.
