

We are now trying to find ways in which we can improve our children's behavior in school and at home. How do we communicate with them so they will listen! Let us read them stories. Many psychotherapists use metaphors and stories to help children overcome their problems. They say that if a story is to interest the children, it must entertain, and stimulate their imagination. It may also help them resolve some of their problems. These enchanting and inspirational stories will motivate and inspire the children to learn in a fun and enjoyable way. These stories I feel will positively affect children's social attitude increase their self-esteem and motivate them to develop a friendly and joy outlook on life. These early years are when the seeds of self-esteem are planted. These stories are fun, educational and effective tools. They encourage children to share their feelings and learn values. These stories help shape the self-image children will with them throughout their lives. It will give them inner strength and confidence from which to draw on for the rest of their lives. These stories are written mainly for children, parents, teachers or anyone who shares the responsibility of educating children. These stories address many issues that are facing today, and we want our children to be aware of them. Stories about keeping our environment clean, the importance of a good education, providing enough food and proper housing for all, kindness to animals and other such stories to inspire our children to serve and work together to make it a better world. I have also in my stories included people from Mars and Pluto in an exchange-learning program with people from here. We need to do everything we can to prepare our children for the challenges of the next century, for they will be the ones who will be called on to help build a better, more united and peaceful world after these terrible times of war, uncertainties and fears that we are facing today have passed. Our youth and children need to prepare now to be ready for that time.
